MELBOURNE

ARE WE MISSING SOMETHING?

The city of Melbourne is heavily expansive through its many cultures. Cultures of beauty such as food, fashion, the arts, and design. Melbourne is a modern plateau, is known as 'The Most Livable City in 2017', it certainly has its outstanding benefits being within its culture.

There is one outstanding secret piece that is missing though, and it's the connection of movement, fluidity, and action. These traits are strongly presented through the form of dance, and Melbourne is slowly becoming more immersed with the growing street dance culture, day after another.

If you plan to visit Melbourne and are a dancer or wanting to begin learning, you are in the right place and will be amongst many people who are the same mindset and situation as you. A new, and willing learner. Coming to Melbourne to dance is more than just simply traveling, you are escaping your reality, your current work lifestyle and entering Melbourne which is open to you and open to present to you the ideas of Street Dance.

HISTORY

In case you don't know, street dance is a term that has been around and popularized since the early 1980's. Street dance is mainly developed outside a studio setting and is set beyond regular dancing boundaries. Most places street dance occurs are social areas such as streets, clubs, and parks. Anywhere social.

Street dance had its first originated styles typically associated with it. These were breaking, popping, and locking. There are younger forms that originated after and they are known as krumping and house, aggressive and fluid styles.

Each style has its origins dating to different parts, though popular styles such as breaking were evolved in New York at around 1970 while popping came from California in 1960.

Now, many studios take upon hip hop and street dance and bring about these many styles unto the platter, each with many unique moves, styles, and stories to tell. Street dance has evolved to become more than performances on the street, but performances on stages and larger venues where they are seen and respected for their talented skill.

Before you go, some tips and recommendations.

- Choose a studio that's closer to you and where you live. After a session at the studio, you might feel tired and sore. Reducing the stress on your body will allow you to get home well and safe.
- Consider the pricing. Will you go to more than one class? If so, consider getting a membership! If you enjoy your studio, it would be worth the money.
- Try both studios or other studios you find and compare. Which one do you like the most and want to invest more time in? Do you want to go both and many more? The choice is yours.
- Choose times that suit you, don't force yourself to attend a session when you can't go to.
- Go with a friend, if you struggle at making friends, bring a friend along to accompany you and get you both to be familiar with the studio and the people!

THE FUTURE IS ONLY GETTING BETTER.

DANCE IS A STORY
